

Great Revolt Further Reading

Primary Source Material:

R. B. Dobson, The Peasants' Revolt of 1381 (2nd edition, London: Macmillan, 1983). An indispensable introduction to the rising with extensive translations of primary sources

'Public Violence' in Later Medieval England, Medieval Sourcebook available here: <https://sourcebooks.fordham.edu/sbook1n.asp#Later%20Medieval%20England> contains a range of primary sources in translation.

Richard II: From Minority to Tyranny 1377-99, ed. by A. K. McHardy (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2012) provides a range of primary sources with contextual introductions relating to every stage of Richard II's reign including the 1381 revolt.

Popular Protest in Late Medieval Europe, ed. by Samuel K. Cohn Jr. (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2004) provides a range of primary sources with contextual introductions covering the popular protests which took place across Europe between 1245 and 1423.

Secondary Source Material

Juliet Barker, England Arise: The People, The King and the Great Revolt of 1381 (London: Little Brown, 2014). A lively and authoritative narrative of the rising.

The Routledge History Handbook of Medieval Revolt, ed. J. Firnhaber-Baker and D. Schoenaers (Abingdon: Routledge, 2016) contains chapters on the 1381 Great Revolt and the other Late Medieval European revolts.

An edition of the BBC Radio 4 programme In Our Time discussing the 1381 revolt, introduced by Melvyn Bragg and featuring Professor Caroline Barron, Dr Alastair Dunn and Professor Miri Rubin, is available here.

The Citizens 800 Project video series featuring Dr Claire Kennan on the 1381 Great Revolt is available here.

The People of 1381, an AHRC funded research project at the University of Reading, has lots of helpful information and will be launching a fully searchable database providing details on the people and places involved in the revolt. More information here.

BBC History magazine has a range of articles and podcasts relating to the revolt here and a brand-new article exploring the military nature of the revolt in its current issue.